1     I.     INTRODUCTION

2                 United Micronesia Development Association, Inc. (“UMDA” or “Defendant”) does not 3 contest this court’s jurisdiction to hear the claims brought by Laramie Fealty LLC (“Laramie”), 4 the trustee of the GET Realty Trust (“GET”) and does not dispute that those claims are adequately
 5 plead. Instead, Defendant argues that this Court should abstain from hearing these claims, in favor
 6 of litigation pending in the Superior Court for the Commonwealth for the Northern Marianas 7 Islands (“CNMI”). Despite its trappings, however, the present motion is not a genuine appeal to 8 federalism or comity, but is rather an attempt to prevent any court in any jurisdiction from hearing 9 GET’s claims.

10                 Review of the record in the CNMI Superior Court reveals that Laramie brought these 11 claims on behalf of GET in federal court only after UMDA moved the Superior Court to dismiss 12 GET’s claims. Curiously, that earlier motion goes wholly unmentioned by UMDA in the present 13 motion, even though UMDA cites the “sanctions” motion that accompanied the motion to 14 dismiss.<sup>1</sup> In that undisclosed motion, UMDA argued that neither GET nor Laramie were parties to 15 the litigation, and therefore neither could bring claims against UMDA in Superior Court.
 16 Moreover, UMDA argued that Laramie should never be substituted for GET’s former trustee as a 17 defendant in that case. Taken together, these positions act as a complete bar on the claims in 18 Superior Court: if Laramie is not a party to the Superior Court action now and it can never become 19 one, but at the same time, Laramie – as GET’s current trustee – is the only party that can bring 20 GET’s claims, then the Superior Court could never have jurisdiction over GET’s claims.

21                 Clearly, the Superior Court cannot simultaneously have jurisdiction over GET’s claims (as 22 UMDA tells this Court now) and never have jurisdiction (as UMDA told the Superior Court 23 before). Laramie respectfully suggests that it is not this Court’s role to figure out which of 24 UMDA’s irreconcilable positions is genuine, and which is merely a tactical reversal. Rather, 25 UMDA should be held to its original contention that Laramie’s claims cannot be heard in the

26
 27                 <sup>1</sup> The Superior Court motion is attached to the Declaration of Colin Thompson as Exhibit A.
 28

1 Superior Court, and therefore, the Court should conclude that they can only be heard here. Given 2 UMDA's prior position, the pendency of an action in the state court is no bar to proceedings 3 concerning the same matter in the Federal court having jurisdiction, and the motion should be 4 denied.

5 II. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

6 A. The Initial Investment and Formation of UMDA LaoLao LLC

7 In 2004, UMDA formed UMDA LaoLao LLC (the "LLC") as an investment vehicle to 8 purchase shares of SLDI, a corporation that operated the LaoLao Golf Course located in the 9 CNMI. (Complaint ¶ 6.) UMDA itself purchased 51% of the SLDI shares, while the LLC 10 purchased the remaining 49%. (Id. at ¶¶ 7-8.) UMDA invited other investors to purchase an 11 interest in the LLC, and Mr. Robert Pfaff – who was a UMDA director at the time – solicited 12 funds for the investment from business associates and entities, including GET, an irrevocable trust 13 established by Mr. Pfaff's wife for the benefit of their children, and managed by an independent 14 trustee. (Id. at ¶¶ 2, 10.) In addition, several other UMDA board members also invested in the 15 LLC through various entities. (Id. at ¶ 11.)

16 UMDA did not invest in the LLC itself, but served as manager of the LLC. (Id. at ¶ 9.)
 17 UMDA's duties and responsibilities as manager of the LLC are spelled out in the LLC's Second 18 Amended and Restated Operating Agreement, the Uniform Limited Liability Company Act of 19 2004, as well as in the common law. (Id. at ¶ 20-21.) The most salient duty lies in Paragraphs 20 9.04 and 12.03(b)(4) of the Operating Agreement, and Section 405 of the LLC Act, all of which 21 require any distributions of LLC property to LLC members be made in shares proportional to their 22 ownership interests. (Id.)

23 B. UMDA's Misappropriation of GET's Interest in the LLC

24 UMDA and the LLC eventually sold their holdings in the LaoLao Golf Course to Kumho 25 Holdings, for almost twice the price initially paid. (Id. at ¶ 15.) Even before the sale was 26 completed, however, UMDA knew that the investment was going to be quite profitable, and took 27 steps to cut GET and others out of the LLC, and convert the members' initial investment and 28 profits for UMDA's own use. (Id. at ¶ 12.) UMDA's first effort to misappropriate GET's

1 investment in the LLC came in the form of an offer letter from UMDA's Share Repurchase 2 Committee. (Id. at ¶¶ 13-14.) While knowing full well that UMDA and the LLC would be able to 3 sell the golf course at a significant profit, UMDA offered to purchase GET's LLC units for only 4 $1.1M. (Id. at ¶ 13.) UMDA made this offer even though GET initially invested $1.5M in the 5 LLC, and with UMDA knowing that the LLC membership was worth nearly $2.9M as a result of 6 the pending sale to Kumho. (Id. at ¶¶ 14-17.) UMDA concealed the sale negotiations from GET 7 in breach of its fiduciary duties when it made its purchase offer, hoping to catch GET unawares
 8 and misappropriate its share of the profits. (Id. at ¶¶ 16-17.)

9       C. UMDA's Unsupported Litigation in the CNMI Superior Court

10       When this fraudulent scheme failed, UMDA embarked on Plan B, which was to simply 11 convert GET's share of the LLC's investment and profits, while simultaneously distributing LLC 12 funds to those LLC members who were favored UMDA board members. (Id. at ¶¶ 18-23.) Only 13 after the conversion of GET's property was complete, UMDA brought an action in the Superior 14 Court against GET and the other LLC investors, except for those favored investors who received 15 their distributions. (See generally Defendant's Request for Judicial Notice ("RJN") at Ex. 2.) The 16 Superior Court complaint fails to articulate any particular wrongdoing by any of the thirty-one 17 defendants named therein. (Id.) Notably, not a single allegation of wrongdoing or tortious 18 activity is leveled at the GET Trust, the actual investor in the LLC – notwithstanding the 19 requirements of Rules 8 and 9 of the Commonwealth Rules of Civil Procedure. (Id.) Accordingly, 20 the Superior Court lawsuit is nothing but ex post cover for UMDA's prior tortious conduct.

21       D. The Preliminary Injunction And Its Terms

22       In the Superior Court action, UMDA obtained a preliminary injunction, which ordered 23 GET's share of the LLC's initial investment and profits – along with other LLC Members' shares 24 – to be held by the Court in an interest bearing account. (See generally RJN Ex. 5.) The court's 25 order was premised exclusively on the self interested testimony of UMDA's directors, who 26 themselves invested in the LLC. (Id. at 2.) Inexplicably, although the Superior Court's 27 preliminary injunction confiscated GET's property, the Superior Court failed to find any 28 wrongdoing by GET.

Indeed, the order granting the preliminary injunction spares only four sentences on the “Merits” of UMDA’s claims, and even there, the discussion fails to mention any wrongdoing. Rather, the Superior Court held that “Plaintiffs have not shown that money defrauded from UMDA was used by Member-Defendants for their investment in LLC.” (Id. at 18.) Apart from this language, which appears to fully exonerate GET, the Superior Court order makes no mention of GET at all. The Superior Court further held, in the same section, that “it is unclear which side will prevail on the merits of the claims of the case.” (Id.) Despite finding that UMDA had not proven any liability on the part of GET in particular, or on the part of any defendant at all, the Superior Court ultimately granted the motion and issued the injunction on November 13, 2007. (Id.) GET has appealed the Court’s order. (RJN Ex. 6.)

E. Dismissal of the Complaint

The CNMI action initially named GET as a party to the complaint, as well as its then present trustee, Thomas Sorenson. GET moved to dismiss, on the well-recognized ground that trusts cannot be parties to an action, and can only sue or be sued through their trustees. (See, e.g., Com. R. Civ. P. 17(a); RJN Ex. 7 at 3-4.) When the motion was initially filed, on August 9, 2007, Sorenson was GET’s trustee. Sorenson was also sued in his individual capacity, along with KCT Irrevocable Trust, another trust defendant which Sorenson represented as Trustee. (RJN Ex. 2.) Accordingly, Sorenson and KCT also moved for dismissal, Sorenson as an individual (on personal jurisdiction grounds) and KCT on the same ground as GET, i.e., that only the trustee may be sued. (See generally RJN Ex. 7 at 3, 4, 8.)

On or about December 27, 2007, Laramie became the trustee for GET, and remains the current trustee today.<sup>2</sup> (See Complaint ¶ 3.) Only after the change in trustees, the Superior Court ruled on GET, KCT and Sorenson’s motions to dismiss. (See generally RJN Ex. 7.) The Superior Court found that a trust cannot be named as a party to the suit, and that only the trustee may be so

<sup>2</sup> Although UMDA appears to argue that Laramie is not the present trustee, all allegations in the complaint are presumed to be true on a motion to dismiss. See e.g. Oxygenated Fuels Ass’n Inc. v. Davis, 331 F.3d 665, 667 (9th Cir. 2003); Warren v. Fox Family Worldwide, Inc., 328 F.3d 1136, 1139 (9th Cir. 2003).

1 named, and therefore dismissed GET and KCT as parties. (Id. at 4, 8.) The court also found that 2 it lacked personal jurisdiction over Sorenson as an individual, and dismissed him. (Id. at 3-4.)
 3 However, the Superior Court's order was clear that UMDA was to amend its complaint to name
 4 the trustee of GET as a party. (Id. at 4, 8.)

5 F. GET's Counterclaims in the CNMI Action

6 As manager of the LLC, UMDA owed contractual, statutory and fiduciary duties to 7 distribute the LLC assets to the LLC members on a non-discriminatory basis. (Complaint at ¶¶ 8 20-21.) UMDA also owed additional fiduciary duties to the LLC members, including a duty to 9 account for the LLC's property to the members, and a duty not to misappropriate LLC assets for 10 itself. (Id.) As the foregoing illustrates, UMDA has failed in all of these duties, insofar as it has 11 distributed LLC assets to some favored LLC members, but not to GET and the other disfavored
 12 LLC members, and then filed the unfounded Superior Court action to justify its embezzlement 13 after-the-fact. These acts also amount to conversion of GET's property. Accordingly, Laramie 14 filed counterclaims against UMDA for its breaches and conversion, and also demanded an 15 accounting and a constructive trust. The counterclaims were essentially identical to the claims 16 raised in the instant Complaint.

17 In response to the counterclaims, UMDA moved to dismiss and also moved for sanctions.
 18 Curiously, although UMDA makes much of the sanctions motion, it makes no mention of the 19 Superior Court motion to dismiss. (See, e.g., Motion at 1:14, 5:17 (trumpeting the sanctions 20 motion but making no mention of the Superior Court motion), see also Banes Decl. (failing to 21 reference or attach the Superior Court motion; and Request for Judicial Notice (same).) In that 22 undisclosed motion, UMDA contended that “[t]he Counterclaims should be dismissed because 23 neither Laramie Fealty nor GET is a party to this litigation.” (Thompson Decl. Ex. A at 2.) 24 Laramie Fealty, UMDA argues, had never been a party and GET, which was named by UMDA in 25 the CNMI action, was dismissed by court order on April 4, 2008. (Id.) In other words, according 26 to UMDA, the complaint in the CNMI action has been dismissed and has no vitality, and

27

28

1 therefore, there is apparently no action pending against GET.<sup>3</sup> As support for its motion, UMDA 2 claimed that it “is black letter law and self-evident that in order to have a counterclaim there must 3 first be a claim against the party asserting the counterclaim.” (Id. at 5.) Because, in UMDA’s 4 view, it had no claims pending against GET or its trustee, the counterclaims must be dismissed:
 5 “[p]urported counterclaims brought by a stranger to the litigation are subject to dismissal.” (Id.)

6 UMDA also contended that the only way Laramie Fealty could proceed with claims on 7 behalf of GET is by seeking court permission under Com. R. Civ. P. 25(c). (Id. at 2, 6-7.) UMDA 8 cited no authority for the proposition that a trustee must request permission from the court before 9 retiring, or that a trust must request permission before hiring a replacement, because no such 10 authority exists. But in any event, this argument proved to be a red herring, as UMDA also 11 claimed that any motion under Rule 25 should be denied by the Superior Court. (Id. at 7.) At the 12 same time, it is a matter of black letter law that only the present trustee may proceed in court on 13 behalf of the trust, as the Superior Court held. (See, e.g., RJN Ex. 7 at 3-4.) Accordingly, the 14 practical effect of the Superior Court motion is to foreclose the Superior Court from ruling on 15 GET’s claims under any circumstances. If Laramie cannot bring the claims in Superior Court, as 16 UMDA alleged, then no one can.

17 III. LEGAL ANALYSIS

18 A. A Compulsory Counterclaim in State Court Does Not Preclude Jurisdiction of 19 This Federal Court

20 UMDA’s first argument is that Laramie’s claims are compulsory counterclaims, which can 21 only be heard in the Superior Court. (Motion at 8-12.) However, federal district courts have 22 jurisdiction over proceedings involving the same claims as those that are being heard in a 23 concurrent state court, unless a specific rule of abstention applies. As recently emphasized by the 24 United States Supreme Court in Exxon Mobil Corp. v. Saudi Basic Indus. Corp., 544 U.S. 280, 25 292 (2005), “[t]his Court has repeatedly held that ‘the pendency of an action in the state court is

26

27

28

1 no bar to proceedings concerning the same matter in the Federal court having jurisdiction.”’’ See 2 also McClellan v. Carland, 217 U.S. 268, 282 (1910); accord Doran v. Salem Inn, Inc., 422 U.S.
 3 922, 928 (1975); Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Locomotive Engineers, 398 U.S. 281, 295 (1970).
 4 Where a federal court has jurisdiction over a case, that court has a “virtually unflagging obligation 5 ... to exercise the jurisdiction given them.” Colorado River Water Conservation Dist. v. United 6 States, 424 U.S. 800, 817 (1976). Because of this unflagging obligation, a federal court may 7 decline to hear a parallel case under its jurisdiction “only in the exceptional circumstances where 8 the order to the parties to repair to the State court would clearly serve an important countervailing 9 interest.” Id. at 813.

10 No Ninth Circuit authority addresses the precise issue confronted by this District Court.
 11 However, in a well reasoned and detailed opinion from the District of Columbia Circuit Court of 12 Appeals, the Court in Handy v. Shaw, Bransford, Velleux & Roth, 325 F.3d 346 (D.C. Cir. 2003), 13 held that the Rule 13(a) compulsory counterclaim provision of the Superior Court of the District of 14 Columbia did not mandate the dismissal of a parallel federal court proceeding. Id. at 350-351. In 15 Handy, the federal district court dismissed appellant’s suit on the basis that Rule 13(a) required 16 that “[a] pleading shall state as a counterclaim any claim which at the time of serving the pleading 17 the pleader has against any opposing party, if it arises out of the transaction or occurrence that is 18 the subject matter of the opposing party’s claim,” compels a litigant to bring all claims arising out 19 of the same transaction or occurrence in a single forum. Handy v. Shaw, Bransford, Velleux &
 20 Roth, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25189 at *4, Civ. A. No. 00-2336 (D.D.C. June 5, 2001). Reversing 21 the district court, the Court of Appeals explained that “while it is true that the purpose of Rule 22 13(a) is to consolidate logically related claims, it is usually applied in subsequent litigation on res
 23 judicata grounds or estoppel principles.” Handy, 325 F.3d at 350. Further noting that the parallel 24 proceedings in Handy took place between a federal district court and the Superior Court of the 25 District of Columbia, the Court rejected the application of parallel federal case principles and 26
 27
 28

1 declared that “it is Colorado River..., and not [parallel federal cases analysis] or any compulsory 2 counterclaim rule as the district court believed, that applies here.” Id. at 351.<sup>4</sup>

3 Laramie respectfully suggests that if or when the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals addresses
 4 the effect of the Commonwealth’s Rule 13(a) compulsory joinder rule to this federal proceeding, it 5 will follow Handy and Supreme Court precedent and find that “it is Colorado River..., and not 6 [parallel federal cases analysis] or any compulsory counterclaim rule as the district court believed, 7 that applies here.” Accordingly, the Court must reject UMDA’s argument GET’s claims are 8 compulsory counterclaims, which can only be heard in the Superior Court.

9 B. UMDA’s Prior Positions Make This Court The Only Proper Forum

10 1. GET’s Claims Cannot Be Compulsory Counterclaims in Light of 11 UMDA’s Prior Position That They Cannot Be Counterclaims At All

12 Even if UMDA’s “compulsory counterclaim” theory found compelling support in case
 13 law, it still must fail here. UMDA contends that GET’s claims are compulsory counterclaims 14 which can only be heard by the Superior Court. UMDA makes this argument with a straight face

16 <sup>4</sup> The cases cited by Defendant for the contrary proposition are either inapplicable to the present
 17 situation or are of dubious legal value. For instance, UMDA prominently features Bonadio v. East
Park Research, 220 F.R.D. 187 (N.D.N.Y. 2003) and Shmuel Shmueli, Bashe, Inc. v. Lowenfeld, 18 68 F.Supp.2d 161 (E.D.N.Y. 1999), for the proposition that the claims filed in this Court must 19 actually be filed in the Commonwealth Superior Court. Review of the cases clearly demonstrate 20 them to be cases analyzing motions to dismiss parallel federal district court cases, an analysis wholly different from analysis applicable to parallel state and federal case (i.e. Colorado River abstention analysis). Accordingly, Bonadio and Lowenfeld are inapplicable to the present scenario.

21 The other cases cited by Defendant, although applicable, are of dubious legal value. Bankcard
Systems, Inc. v. Miller/Overfelt, Inc., 219 F.3d 770, 775 (8th Cir. 2000) fails to consider the clear 22 and controlling Supreme Court precedent of McClellan v. Carland and its progeny (i.e., the 23 pendency of an action in the state court is no bar to proceedings concerning the same matter in the 24 Federal court having jurisdiction) and the clear and controlling precedent of Colorado River and 25 its progeny (i.e., that a federal court may decline to hear a parallel case under its jurisdiction only in the exceptional circumstances where the order to the parties to repair to the State court would 26 clearly serve an important countervailing interest). The other cases cited by Defendant, Banner
Industries of New York, Inc. v. Sansom, 830 F.Supp. 325, 327 (S.D.W.Va. 1993) and Dixon v.
Smith, 1989 WL 59604 (D.Kan. May 18, 1989), suffer from the same defective analysis. Clearly, 27 the persuasive value of these cases is severely limited.

1 only because it is deliberately concealing from this Court its earlier motion to dismiss filed in the 2 Superior Court (the “Superior Court motion”). (See generally Thompson Decl. Ex. A.) Therein, 3 UMDA argued unequivocally that GET’s claims could not be heard in the Superior Court, because 4 GET’s claims are “brought by a stranger to the litigation [and] subject to dismissal.” (Id. at 5.)
5 Counterclaims can only be asserted by a party to the underlying litigation, yet UMDA has taken 6 the unequivocal position that Laramie should not become a party. (Id.) Indeed, UMDA argued 7 that even if Laramie moved for substitution under Rule 25(c), it could not become a party in the 8 Superior Court, because such a motion should be denied. (Id. at 7.)

9       But when Laramie filed those claims here, UMDA faithlessly changed its tune. Now, 10 UMDA argues that GET’s claims are “compulsory counterclaims” that can only be heard in the 11 Superior Court. (Motion at 8-12.) However, UMDA is careful not to admit that Laramie is a 12 proper party in the Superior Court or even admit that Laramie is the current trustee of the GET 13 trust. Instead, it sets up Laramie’s dismissal in both the Federal and Superior Courts by arguing 14 that Laramie cannot bring this lawsuit because it should be a counterclaim in the Superior Court
15 while simultaneously blocking the suit in the Superior Court by arguing that Laramie is not a 16 party.

17       The position UMDA asserted in the Superior Court – and has not recanted – is fatal to its 18 claim that the instant claims are compulsory counterclaims. If UMDA is correct that Laramie’s 19 claims cannot be counterclaims (because the present trustee cannot assert them), then they cannot 20 be compulsory counterclaims, either. Put another way, since (1) GET’s trustee is the only entity 21 that can prosecute GET’s claims, and (2) UMDA contends that the trustee may never join the 22 CNMI action as a party, then (3) GET’s claims cannot, as a matter of law, be counterclaims, 23 whether compulsory or otherwise.

25

26

27

28

1 UMDA offers no explanation as to how or why its prior position can be squared with its 2 current position. The two positions are irreconcilable.<sup>5</sup> Granting this motion simply rewards
3 UMDA for its assertion of inconsistent positions, and ultimately leaves Laramie and GET with no 4 forum at all.

2. GET Cannot “Forum Shop” When UMDA Has Left The Federal Court as the Only Available Forum

7 UMDA also argues that the complaint should be dismissed because GET is forum 8 shopping. This remarkable assertion is made throughout UMDA's motion, including in the 9 discussion of the Colorado River doctrine and is responded to collectively here.

10 According to the position taken by UMDA, the federal court is the only forum open GET's 11 claims to be heard. As described above, UMDA took the position in its Superior Court motion 12 that GET's claims could not be heard in the Superior Court, because neither GET nor its Trustee 13 was, or could become, a party to that case. UMDA's conviction was apparently so strong that it 14 accompanied the Superior Court motion with a motion for sanctions against Laramie's counsel.
15 Surely, such vehemence can only mean that UMDA must have had a firm and abiding belief in the 16 merits of its motion. Accordingly, GET took UMDA at its word, accepted at face value the 17 argument that it could not bring its claims in state court, and brought them in federal court. When 18 the claims cannot be brought in state court, bringing them elsewhere is not "forum shopping," it is 19 appealing to the only forum available.

20 In a vain effort to cover up its contradictory positions, UMDA attempts to attribute various 21 strategic and nefarious motives to Laramie's filing in federal court. See, e.g., Travelers Indemnity
22 Co. v. Madonna, 914 F.2d 1364, 1371 (9th Cir. 1990) ("In the Colorado River context, this Circuit 23 has held that forum shopping weighs in favor of a stay when the party opposing the stay seeks to 24 avoid adverse rulings made by the state court or to gain a tactical advantage from the application

<sup>26</sup> 5 C.f. United States v. Nix, 21 F.3d 347 (9th Cir. 1994)(explaining that the doctrine of judicial estoppel is invoked “to prevent a party from changing its position over the course of judicial proceedings when such positional changes have an adverse impact on the judicial process.”)

1 of federal court rules.”) Yet, UMDA alleges no strategic purpose for GET to file in federal court,
 2 because none can be found. GET has not faced any “adverse rulings” on any of the issues raised 3 in its claims. In fact, in the Superior Court, GET won the only substantive motion it brought in the 4 Superior Court!

5 Nevertheless, UMDA complains, for example, that GET attempted to “circumvent 6 Commonwealth Rule of Civil Procedure 25(c)” by moving to federal court. (Motion at 17:10-11.)
 7 UMDA cannot explain how this might be a tactical advantage to GET, since, as UMDA itself 8 admits, GET remains liable for any judgment rendered in this case regardless of the name of the 9 trustee on the caption. (See, e.g., Motion at 10:6-8.) Thus, despite UMDA’s nefarious insinuations, 10 UMDA cannot articulate any actual strategic advantage to GET “avoiding” Rule 25(c).

11 But UMDA’s invocation of Rule 25(c) is a red herring, because UMDA has taken the 12 position that it would oppose any motion brought under Rule 25(c) in any event. (Thompson 13 Decl. Ex. A at 7.) That is, UMDA would actually prevent Laramie Fealty, GET’s current trustee, 14 from representing GET in the Superior Court. UMDA claimed in the Superior Court motion that 15 “in the event Laramie Fealty files such a motion [under Fed. R. Civ. P. 25], Plaintiffs would likely 16 oppose it on the ground that the substitution of Laramie Fealty would not expedite or simplify the 17 action.” (Id.) Yet, there is no genuine dispute that the present trustee is Laramie Fealty or that 18 Laramie Fealty is the only entity which can pursue GET’s claims. As a consequence, UMDA’s 19 argument is not that the wrong person brought the claims, but rather, that the claims cannot be 20 heard by the Superior Court at all. This argument belies UMDA’s suggestion that this action 21 should be dismissed, and refiled in the Superior Court, because it is obvious that UMDA would 22 bar the state court’s door to GET’s claims under any circumstances.

23 UMDA also argues that GET filed in federal court in order to cause this Court to review
 24 the Superior Court’s preliminary injunction order. (See, e.g., Motion at 2:12-14, 16:1-8.) While it 25 is true that the Superior Court has issued a preliminary injunction, the Superior Court’s order is 26 clear that the preliminary injunction order did not make any dispositive findings of fact or law. To 27 the contrary, the Superior Court stated that its findings did not establish undisputed facts or the 28 law of the case. (RJN Ex. 5 at 3 n. 2 and 15.) As the Court held, the preliminary injunction order

1 neither establishes “undisputed facts for purposes of summary judgment or Rule 56(d)” nor does it 2 “establish the law of the case with respect to the summary judgment motion.” (Id.) Thus, even 3 though the preliminary injunction was decided adversely to GET, it does not constrain the 4 Superior Court (or any other court) from finding that UMDA’s claims are meritless.

5 Nor do GET’s claims touch on the preliminary injunction order in any way. UMDA has 6 breached its fiduciary duty and breached the LLC operating agreement and violated the limited
 7 liability company laws of the CNMI by, inter alia, discriminatorily distributing the LLC’s assets
 8 to its favored board members while refusing to distribute GET’s share—all conduct that occurred
 9 before the preliminary injunction was issued. Accordingly, when UMDA asserts that GET’s 10 complaint omitted mention the preliminary injunction in the complaint out of some nefarious 11 purpose, UMDA simply fails to understand GET’s claims—the complaint is silent about the 12 preliminary injunction because it is not relevant. The preliminary injunction against the LLC 13 members in the Superior Court is not the subject of the current lawsuit and is not now before this 14 Court.

15 UMDA also seems to argue that this Court would be interfering with the preliminary 16 injunction if it issued a damages award to GET for UMDA’s tortious conduct. (See, e.g., Motion 17 at 6:19-23, 7:6-9.) UMDA misreads the complaint. GET does not request, in its complaint, that 18 this Court tap into the funds held by the Superior Court. This Court is asked only to adjudicate 19 whether UMDA’s conduct has breached its duties, and what damages GET shall recover as a 20 result thereof. The final judgment will require UMDA to pay a sum to GET, but it will not require 21 UMDA to do anything with the money secured by the preliminary injunction. UMDA may end up 22 paying part of this Court’s judgment from the funds stolen from GET, but there is no requirement
 23 that it do so. Money is fungible, and this Court’s final judgment will not dictate which of UMDA’s 24 bank accounts UMDA ultimately uses to satisfy the judgment. Whether UMDA pays damages out 25 of the stolen LLC funds or from some other source is of no moment to GET or this Court.

26       3.     Summary

27 UMDA’s accusations regarding “forum shopping” and “compulsory counterclaims” are 28 mere distractions, designed to draw the Court’s attention away from UMDA’s own irreconcilable

1 positions. UMDA was very clear: GET cannot assert counterclaims in the CNMI court. As such, 2 it also cannot assert compulsory counterclaims, and therefore it cannot be accused of forum
 3 shopping when only one forum is available to it. GET took UMDA's position seriously when it 4 filed in federal court, and so should this Court. UMDA should be held to its initial assertion that 5 GET's claims are not counterclaims – let alone compulsory counterclaims – and UMDA's motion 6 should be denied. Any other holding will simply reward UMDA's feckless strategy, and leave 7 GET with no forum at all.

8       C. The Colorado River Doctrine Does Not Apply

9       UMDA also claims that the federal action should be dismissed or stayed under Colorado
 10 River Water Conservation District v. United States, 424 U.S. 800 (1976), but this doctrine does 11 not help UMDA here. Rather, “generally, as between state and federal courts with concurrent 12 jurisdiction, the rule is that the pendency of an action in the state court is no bar to proceedings 13 concerning the same matter in the federal court having jurisdiction.” Holder v. Holder, 305 F.3d 14 854, 865 (9th Cir. 2002) (citing Colorado River, 424 U.S. at 817 (citations omitted).) 15 Consequently, the “doctrine is a narrow exception to the virtually unflagging obligation of the 16 federal courts to exercise the jurisdiction given them.” Id.

17       UMDA contends that “wide discretion” is given to the district court in deciding whether it 18 shall entertain a duplicative action. (Motion at 12-13.) Not so. In Moses H. Cone Memorial
 19 Hospital v. Mercury Construction Corp., 460 U.S. 1, 15-16 (1983), the Supreme Court clarified 20 that to fit into this narrow doctrine, “exceptional circumstances” must be present. “When a stay for 21 reasons of ‘wise judicial administration’ [under Colorado River] is contemplated, ‘discretion must 22 be exercised within the narrow and specific limits prescribed by the particular abstention doctrine 23 involved.... [T]here is little or no discretion to abstain in a case which does not meet traditional 24 abstention requirements.” Holder v. Holder, 305 F.3d at 868 (citations and quotations omitted; 25 alterations in original). “Thus, the district court’s discretion must have been exercised within the 26 ‘exceptional circumstances’ limits of the Colorado River doctrine.” Id.

27

28

1           1.        *Abstention is Inappropriate Because the CNMI Action Will Not Resolve
 2           The Issues Raised in the Federal Suit

3           The dispositive factor, which short circuits the other Colorado River factors referenced in 4 the UMDA's motion to dismiss, is whether the state court action can resolve all issues between the 5 parties. Holder, 305 F.3d 868. As noted in Moses Cone, whenever "there is substantial doubt that 6 a final determination in the [state court action] will resolve all of the issues in [the] federal 7 [action]," Colorado River does not apply. Id. Accordingly, the stay or dismissal may come about 8 only if "the federal court will have nothing further to do in resolving any substantive part of the 9 case, whether it stays or dismisses." Id. (citing Moses H. Cone, 460 U.S. at 28.) As a result, 10 dismissal or stay is proper if, and only if, the state action resolves all of the parties' claims. See, 11 e.g., Holder, 305 F.3d at 868. The "existence of a substantial doubt as to whether the state 12 proceedings will resolve the federal action precludes the granting of a stay." Intel Corp. v.
 13 Advanced Micro Devices, Inc., 12 F.3d 908, 913 (9th Cir. 1993).

14           UMDA argues that Colorado River applies because the same parties and transactions arise 15 in both cases. But this is not the test. Rather, the court must determine if the CNMI litigation will 16 resolve all the issues between the parties, and it is clear that it cannot. Because UMDA has taken 17 the position that GET cannot assert its claims in the CNMI, the Superior Court cannot provide any 18 relief to GET for UMDA's breach of fiduciary duty, breach of contract or conversion. Indeed, 19 because of UMDA's strategic decision to block GET's claims from being heard in the CNMI, that 20 case can only resolve UMDA's claims against GET. If UMDA fails on those claims, GET's 21 action will remain viable, and still require adjudication. As a result, the Superior Court's final 22 judgment would not resolve the claims raised in this action, and therefore, this Court cannot find 23 that it "will have nothing further to do in resolving any substantive part of the case, whether its 24 stays or dismisses."

25           UMDA also seems to argue that it will prevail on its claims against GET, which will 26 therefore moot this federal action, and that this contingency supports abstention here. Yet, this 27 argument has already been rejected by the Ninth Circuit in Intel Corp. v. Advanced Micro Devices, 28 Inc., 12 F.3d 908, 913 (9th Cir. 1993). There, Intel sued AMD for copyright infringement, based

1 on AMD's use of Intel's computer software. However, in prior litigation, an arbitrator had 2 awarded AMD an unfettered license to use the software, an award that was later challenged on 3 appeal. If the arbitrator's award withstood the appeal, then Intel's claims were barred by the 4 license, whereas if the arbitrator's award were reversed, then Intel could prevail on its claims.
 5 Based on this contingency, the district court granted a stay under Colorado River, but the Ninth 6 Circuit reversed. The Circuit Court wholly rejected the position UMDA advances here, and held 7 that the contingent nature of the federal claims absolutely foreclosed a Colorado River stay. Even 8 though the federal claims might be mooted by state action, the possibility that they may remain 9 viable required the district court to proceed with the case.

10 As the foregoing makes clear, GET will continue to have viable claims against UMDA if 11 UMDA loses in state court. This contingency "raises substantial doubt sufficient to preclude a 12 Colorado River stay." Because this factor, standing alone, is dispositive, UMDA's motion must be 13 denied.

14 2. *The Superior Court Has Not Asserted Jurisdiction Over Any Property

15 Although the foregoing analysis is dispositive, the remaining factors are considered below 16 in the interests of completeness. First, the Court should examine whether the Superior Court has 17 assumed jurisdiction over a property or res at issue in the federal action. UMDA claims that the 18 Superior Court has impounded the LLC's initial investment and profits from the sale of the golf 19 course (which are owed to GET and other defendants in the CNMI action). (Motion at 14.)
 20 UMDA cites no authority in its discussion of this element, because binding Ninth Circuit 21 precedent has – once again – already rejected UMDA's argument. "Money that [plaintiff] seeks to 22 recover is not the sort of tangible physical property referred to in Colorado River." American 23 Intern. Underwriters, Inc. v. Continental Ins. Co., 843 F.2d 1253, 1258 (9th Cir. 1988); see also 24 Travelers Indemnity Co. v. Madonna, 914 F.2d 1364, 1368 (9th Cir. 1990). As a result, this factor 25 cuts against granting the stay or dismissal.<sup>6</sup>

26

27 <sup>6</sup> UMDA concedes that the second factor, the relative convenience of the two fora, does not 28 support its motion, as the federal court is no more or less convenient than the Superior Court.

1                   3.       The Minimal Progress In the Superior Court Does Not Support A Stay

2       UMDA also contends that the federal action should be stayed because GET and UMDA 3 have already been litigating in the Superior Court for over a year. (Motion at 15.) UMDA seems 4 to miss the point, however. "Priority should not be measured exclusively by which complaint was 5 filed first, but rather in terms of how much progress has been made in the two actions." Travelers, 6 914 F.2d at 1370. The reality is that precious little progress has been made in the Superior Court.
7 There is no operative complaint; UMDA has produced no documents in discovery, despite 8 repeated requests by multiple defendants to provide documents which support UMDA's claims.
9 There have only been a handful of depositions (Messrs. Sorenson and Pfaff, and two parties who 10 have settlement agreements with UMDA), and none from UMDA or any of the Board members.
11 Significantly, UMDA has moved to block future discovery. UMDA has not identified, in the now 12 dismissed complaint, or elsewhere, what property UMDA claims was stolen or received by GET, 13 or what misrepresentation or fraud GET committed (despite Com. R. Civ. P. 9 which requires such 14 claims be plead with particularity).

15       To be sure, UMDA has repeatedly complained that GET has transferred assets to new 16 investments, but UMDA has yet to allege or better yet, offer any evidence, that GET's property, 17 whether it was transferred, reinvested or it is in the original or a new bank account, is really 18 UMDA's property. That is, after all, the touchstone contention that supposedly entitles UMDA to 19 both attach GET's money at the Bank of Hawaii (the subject of the preliminary injunction) and to 20 demand discovery of GET's property and bank records subsequent to its purchase of the LLC 21 interests. In sum, there has been very little progress towards trial in the Superior Court since the 22 original complaint was filed. Instead, UMDA has choked the litigation with repeated sideshows 23 and distractions, including baseless sanctions motions and repeated challenges to defense 24 counsel's pro hac vice status. In contrast, consider the authority cited by UMDA, Nakash v.
25 Marciano, 882 F.2d 1411 (9th Cir. 1989), where the state court had issued "numerous substantive 26 orders," held 70 hearings, 100 depositions had been taken, and 300,000 documents had been 27 produced. Id. at 1413.

28

1       In contrast, once this court denies UMDA's motion to dismiss, this court will set a 2 scheduling conference pursuant to LR16.2CJ. This case should be set on a standard track and 3 litigated within twelve months. At the Scheduling conference the court will set forth time limits 4 for motions and discovery. Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 26, the parties will produce their initial 5 disclosures within two weeks of the conference. This case will be in high gear before an operative 6 complaint is ever filed in the Superior Court.

7       In short, although it is true that the CNMI action has been pending for more than a year, 8 the timing alone is not dispositive. "The mere existence of a case on the state docket in no way ...
 9 justif[ies] abstention." Travelers, 914 F.2d at 1370. Here, not only has minimal progress been 10 made on UMDA's claims, but not a whit of work has been done on GET's claims, because 11 UMDA refused to produce documents in discovery and refused to respond to interrogatories. See 12 e.g., Kelly Investment, Inc. v. Continental Common Corp., 315 F.3d 494 (5th Cir. 2003)(where no 13 discovery has taken place in the state court on the issues raised by the federal complaint, dismissal 14 or stay is improper). Where UMDA has successfully bogged down the CNMI litigation for 15 strictly tactical reasons, this factor cuts strongly against a stay or dismissal under Colorado River.

16       4.       No Piecemeal Litigation Will Arise

17       Nor has UMDA explained how "piecemeal litigation" will arise if this Court hears GET's 18 claims. Contrary to UMDA's assertion, Colorado River does not allow the district court to stay or 19 dismiss a case any time related issues are raised in pending state and federal cases. As the Ninth 20 Circuit put it:

21       Colorado River does not say that every time it is possible for a state court to 22 obviate the need for federal review by deciding factual issues in a particular way, 23 the federal court should abstain. As the Supreme Court has observed, such a 24 holding would 'make a mockery of the rule that only exceptional circumstances 25 justify a federal court's refusal to decide a case in deference to the States.'

26       United States v. Morros, 268 F.3d 695, 706 (9th Cir. 2001). "Rather, Colorado River stands for 27 the proposition that when Congress has passed a law expressing a preference for unified state 28 adjudication, courts should respect that preference." Id. The "avoidance of piecemeal litigation" goal is satisfied only when "a strong federal policy [requires] that all claims should be tried in the 1 state courts.” Id. (citing Ryan v. Johnson, 115 F.3d 193, 197-98 (3d Cir. 1997.)) Here, UMDA has 2 identified no such federal policy, because it cannot.

3 Nor has UMDA identified any other risk of piecemeal litigation. “Piecemeal litigation 4 occurs when different tribunals consider the same issue, thereby duplicating efforts and possibly 5 reaching different results.” Travelers, 914 F.2d at 1369. UMDA states that “the same underlying 6 issues permeate both state and federal proceedings” but fails to offer any explanation of how that 7 is the case. (Motion at 15.) As explained above, although the two cases involve some of the same 8 conduct, UMDA’s claims involve the actions of the defendants, including GET and Robert Pfaff, 9 in the years before the LLC was formed, as UMDA’s theory seems to be that these defendants
 10 misappropriated money or assets of UMDA’s and used them to fund GET’s investment in the LLC
 11 (although no such assets have yet been identified). In contrast, GET’s claims concern the conduct
 12 of UMDA in the years after the LLC was formed, up to and including its conduct after the LLC’s 13 sold its sole asset. The two claims do not result in piecemeal litigation, as there is no overlap 14 among these issues.<sup>7</sup>

15 UMDA then attempts to fabricate a “piecemeal” concern by claiming that this Court would 16 be required to “review, at the very least, the [CNMI] Court’s preliminary injunction order.” 17 (Motion at 16.) But, GET’s claims in this Court require no review or modification of the 18 preliminary injunction, as explained above. Rather the claims simply require UMDA to 19 compensate GET for the damages its fiduciary breaches have caused. The preliminary injunction 20 is immaterial to these claims, as UMDA remains liable for damages regardless of the means it 21 employed to breach its fiduciary duties. As noted above, GET simply requests a money judgment 22

23 <sup>7</sup> UMDA argues that GET relied on documents produced by UMDA in connection with its 24 preliminary injunction, as if that somehow establishes that GET’s claims and UMDA’s claims are 25 one and the same. (Motion at 10 n. 9.) The conclusion does not follow (and the evidence 26 proffered by UMDA, RJN Ex. 21, makes no mention of UMDA documents at all). But in any 27 event, there is no surprise that Defendants have pointed to documents produced by UMDA at the hearing, because UMDA has refused to produce a single document in discovery. UMDA cannot refuse to produce documents in discovery, and then complain that defendants failed to cite to unproduced documents.

1 and an accounting from UMDA for its breaches, conversion and violations of CNMI law. The 2 complaint does not request any relief from this Court concerning the preliminary injunction 3 entered in the Superior Court.

4       5. The Presence of Straightforward State Law Issues Precludes a Stay

5 UMDA also contends that, because state law governs GET's claims, a stay or dismissal is 6 proper. (Motion at 16.) Once again, UMDA has the caselaw exactly backwards. In Travelers, the 7 moving party argued that "the presence of state law issues supports abstention" – the same 8 argument UMDA makes here. Travelers, 914 F.2d at 1370. However, the Ninth Circuit was clear 9 that this "argument does not correctly state the law." Id. Rather, "[s]tate-law issues may weigh in 10 favor of abstention only in some rare circumstances." Id. (quoting Moses H. Cone, 460 U.S. at 11 26). "Since this case involves routine issues of state law-[conversion], breach of fiduciary duty, 12 and breach of contract-which the district court is fully capable of deciding, there are no such 'rare 13 circumstances' here." Id. As a result, this factor also weighs against abstention.

14       6. Summary

15 A careful consideration of the Colorado River factors precludes a stay or dismissal here.
 16 The federal action does not duplicate the CNMI action, as the Superior Court cannot resolve 17 GET's claims, according to UMDA's own attorneys. This factor alone is dispositive, but none of 18 the other factors favor a stay or dismissal here, in any event. But more importantly, UMDA's 19 undisclosed motion to dismiss, which it filed in the Superior Court but failed to discuss in its 20 pending motion, reveal that the pending motion is not a genuine appeal for comity or federalism,
 21 but is rather part of UMDA's strategy to prevent any court from ever hearing GET's claims, a 22 result that is directly contrary to the Supreme Court's holding in Colorado River.

23       D. Younger Abstention Does Not Apply

24 UMDA overreaches the most when it argues that Younger abstention should apply here.
 25 (Motion at 18.). Younger is motivated by an unwillingness to interfere in the state court's judicial 26 process. As a result, Younger applies if, and only if, "the [district] court's action would enjoin, or 27 have the practical effect of enjoining, ongoing state court proceedings." Amerisourcebergen Corp.
 28 v. Roden, 495 F.3d 1143, 1149 (9th Cir. 2007). Thus, while UMDA discusses the three other

1 factors identified in the case law, it fails to even address this “fourth” factor, because it cannot. Id.
2 at 1148-49 (district erred by applying only three “Middlesex factors”). Applying this fourth factor
3 is fatal to UMDA’s motion: this federal action does not interfere with, let alone enjoin, the CNMI
4 case. GET’s claims require no review or modification of the preliminary injunction, as UMDA 5 remains liable for damages regardless of the means it employed to breach its fiduciary duties, and 6 GET’s request for a simple money judgment does not require the federal court to take any action 7 in the Superior Court.

8 Here, “issuing an ordinary judgment requiring an individual to pay breach of contract 9 damages -- does not enjoin or ‘have the practical effect of’ enjoining the ongoing state court 10 proceedings.” Id. at 1152. At best, UMDA can argue that a potential conflict could arise between 11 the court judgments, if (and only if) UMDA prevails on some as-yet unidentified claim against 12 GET. (No conflict would arise if UMDA does not prevail against GET.) But a potential of 13 conflicting judgments cannot justify abstention under Younger or any other abstention doctrine.
14 “As the Supreme Court has held, ‘the mere potential for conflict in the results of adjudications 15 does not, without more, warrant staying exercise of federal jurisdiction,’ much less abdicating it 16 entirely.” Amerisourcebergen, 495 F.3d at 1151 (citing Colorado River, 424 U.S. at 816). It is 17 wholly improper for the district court to abstain, as UMDA urges here, “whenever a suit involves 18 claims or issues simultaneously being litigated in state court merely because whichever court rules 19 first will, via the doctrines of res judicata and collateral estoppel, preclude the other from deciding 20 the claim or issue.” Id. Instead, the state court proceedings are “free to continue simultaneously 21 with the federal suit and [the federal plaintiff] would have simply been bound by the rulings of the 22 ... state courts under the doctrine of collateral estoppel to the extent the state courts decided the 23 relevant issues before the federal court did.” Id. Indeed, this conclusion is even more compelling 24 here, where UMDA has barred the state courthouse door to GET’s claims, and steadfastly 25 contends that they cannot be heard in the Superior Court. Where GET cannot even assert the 26 claims in state court, the chances that the Superior Court will rule on them is exceedingly slim, 27 and that slim chance is insufficient to justify abstention here. “Concurrent consideration, not 28 abstention, is the solution.” Id.

1 UMDA also fails to articulate any coherent argument concerning the second factor, i.e., 2 that the state litigation involves an important state interest. “The second threshold element of 3 Younger is satisfied when ‘the State’s interests in the [ongoing] proceeding are so important that 4 exercise of the federal judicial power would disregard the comity between the States and the 5 National Government.’” Id. (citing Pennzoil Co. v. Texaco, Inc., 481 U.S. 1, 11 (1987)). UMDA
 6 contends that the CNMI has an important state interest in the litigation in the Superior Court
 7 because it is a shareholder of UMDA. But that interest has nothing to do with the comity concerns 8 underlying Younger abstention. “The goal of Younger abstention is to avoid federal court 9 interference with uniquely state interests such as preservation of these states’ peculiar statutes, 10 schemes, and procedures.” Id. (emphasis in original). The CNMI’s interest, as a mere shareholder 11 is no different than the interest of any other shareholder of UMDA – and has nothing to do with 12 preservation of the state’s lawmaking or enforcement powers as a sovereign. UMDA’s interest as 13 a shareholder is not unique to the state, and therefore is not entitled to special protection under 14 Younger.<sup>8</sup>

15 In sum, UMDA’s invocation of Younger attempts to fit a square peg in a round hole.
 16 Younger is not a general ban on parallel litigation; it only serves as a check on federal court action 17 that interferes with the state court’s judicial process. No such interference is present here, and 18 Younger does not apply.

19 IV. CONCLUSION

20 In the final pages of its motion, UMDA poses the rhetorical question that it evaded 21 throughout the entire brief: “So why did Mr. Thompson, [GET’s counsel], rush to file a complaint 22 in a new Court containing the exact five claims that he just dismissed in the Superior Court?”
 23 (Motion at 17.) The answer is clear: because UMDA would not let them proceed elsewhere. This 24 simple truth is apparent from the face of UMDA’s motion in the Superior Court, and is so

25 _____
 26 <sup>8</sup> UMDA does not go so far as to contend, and GET does not understand UMDA to argue, that it is 27 a state actor or that the lawsuit it brought in the Superior Court amounts to state action by the Commonwealth.

1 damning to UMDA's present motion that UMDA actively concealed the Superior Court motion 2 from this Court. UMDA instead fabricated baseless allegations of forum shopping, but filing in 3 federal court cannot be forum shopping when it is the only forum available.

4 UMDA has not recanted the position taken in the Superior Court, which is wholly 5 inconsistent with its position here. Thus, UMDA simultaneously moves this Court for a stay 6 pending the Superior Court's resolution of GET's claims, and at the same time, moved the 7 Superior Court to dismiss those claims because that court can never hear those claims. UMDA
8 cannot have it both ways, but it is not the role of this Court to sort out UMDA's bad faith position
9 from its genuine position. Let UMDA's original position be taken at face value, and let this Court 10 hear the claims that – according to UMDA – cannot be heard in the Superior Court. The Motion 11 should be denied.
